Poem – “The Legacy of My School”

In the heart of learning, proud and true,
 Stands a school where dreams come true.
 Shirdi Sai, our guiding light,
 Leading us from dark to bright.

With books and pens, we take our flight,
 In halls that echo with knowledge & might.
 Here, values grow and talents bloom,
 A second home from every room.

Our teachers – kind, so wise, so strong,
 Have taught us right, have shown us wrong.
 In every lesson, every test,
 They push us forward to be our best

The playground rings with cheerful sound,
 Where friendships grow and goals are found.
 From art to science, sports to song,
 In every heart, we all belong.

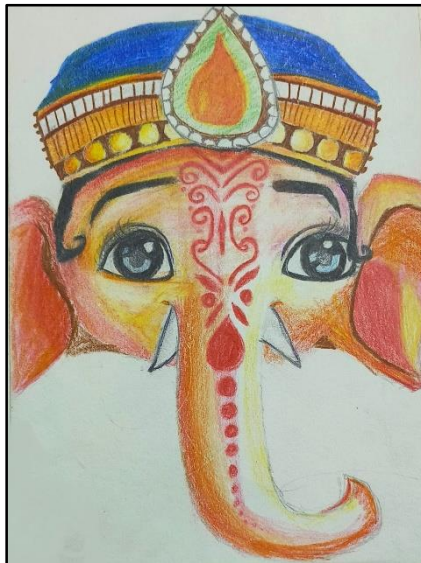

We learn to lead, we learn to care,
 To dream, to build, to always share.
 With Sai Baba’s blessings from above,
 We walk with hope, with pride, with love.

Years may pass, but we’ll still say,
 “My school shaped me in every way.”
 A legacy strong, a future bright—
 Shirdi Sai shines with endless light.

Article – “Why We Should Listen More Than We Speak”

These days, most of us love to talk, whether it’s about school, new trends, games, or our opinions. But have you ever stopped to think about how often we actually listen? Listening sounds easy, yet it’s one of the most powerful ways to build real connections.

When we truly pay attention to someone, we show them respect. Imagine sharing a story while the other person keeps checking their phone or interrupting you, it doesn’t feel good. Now imagine someone who looks at you, nods, and reacts with genuine interest. That simple effort makes anyone feel valued and heard. Listening also helps us grow. When we speak, we repeat what we already know. When we listen, we gain new ideas, stories, and perspectives. Every single person we meet knows something we don’t, and we can only learn it if we’re willing to listen.

Strong friendships are built on this. Friends open up more easily when they feel someone is truly hearing them. Remembering small details or asking thoughtful questions shows them you care.

Most importantly, listening helps avoid conflicts. Many arguments begin because people don’t wait to hear the whole story. Giving someone time to finish before responding can prevent misunderstandings.

Becoming a better listener isn’t hard, look at the person, avoid interrupting, and show genuine interest. In a world that’s always buzzing with noise, being the one who listens can make you stand out and make your relationships so much stronger.

Being the Cultural Captain has taught me that leadership is not about giving directions, but about inspiring others to express their talents with confidence. This journey has shown me how culture binds us together and gives every student a platform to shine. More than achievements, I value the friendships, memories, and lessons this role has gifted me. To my juniors, I would say — never hesitate to step forward, because every effort you make adds to the spirit of our school. I remain deeply grateful to my teachers and peers for believing in me.

~Vasu Singh, Cultural Captain

Serving as the Sports Captain has been an immensely rewarding experience, shaped by our school's unwavering commitment to discipline, teamwork, and holistic growth that strengthened my athletic skills and revealed the true meaning of leadership—leading with responsibility, motivating others, and setting an example on and off the field. It taught me that discipline, dedication, and determination are the pillars of both sportsmanship and life. I am grateful to my teachers, mentors, and staff for their guidance and support, which inspired me to strive for excellence.
